Fir, balsam
Abies balsamea

Therapeutic Properties: antiseptic (genitourinary, pulmonary), antiinflammtory, astringent, cicatrizant, diuretic, expectorant, purgative, regulatory, sedative (nerve), tonic, vulnerary

Canadian Balsam Fir has the Latin name Abies balsamea; the meaning of the genus name “Abies” is “living for a long time” or “great longevity”. Abies balsamea is only found in North America; there are fir species in Europe, but not the Abies balsamea. It is unique because of the oleoresin called balsam that oozes from the bark. Balsam resin has two primary uses. First it is a wound healing substance, used first by the Native Americans. Second, it is used in the optical industry because its refraction index is very near that of glass, minimizing image distortion.

Balsam Fir has a powerful psychological influence: it helps release many of the emotional issues behind illness. It helps to open and free the mind and heart. Believed by Dr. Pénôel to protect the health care worker from picking up negative energy released by their clients and patients. Balsam Fir gives exceptional mental clarity, assisting us to let go of old mental patterns that are detrimental.

• To assist the body with sinus infections, apply diluted Balsam Fir on each forefinger and, beginning at the outside end of the eyebrow, massaging very gently just under the eyebrow towards the top of the nose. You must be extremely careful not to get any into the eyes. Another point for sinus application is the 64th point of the bladder meridian. The point is about ½ inch in from the base of the little toe, at the joint of the connecting metatarsal bone. Apply a half drop (just touching edge of orifice reducer) on each foot at these points. Chinese medicine specifies several indications connected to this point, including one called “chronic nasal catarrh”. Catarrh is an inflammation of mucous membranes. The connection to sinusitis is not coincidental.
• Because of its gentleness it can be applied neat over small areas like joints.
• For massage, add to goDesana Organics’ Age Delay Hydrating Hand & Body Lotion or the carrier oil of your choice, adhering to the dilution guidelines on the right of this document.
